Medicine Lodge Peace Treaty Pageant to be held Sept. 25-27.

MEDICINE LODGE - The Medicine Lodge Peace Treaty Pageant is a full scale reenactment encompassing 300 years of history leading up to the great Peace Council of 1867 between the U.S. government and the Plains Indians.

Set in a natural amphitheater overlooking the panoramic backdrop of the Gypsum Hills and the Kansas sky, the event commemorates the cultures of the "Discoverers, Explorers, and Settlers' mixed with the native peoples of the Central Plains. This undertaking by the hundreds of volunteers and livestock from Medicine Lodge and the surrounding area takes place only every three to five years.

Experience history on the red bricks of Main Street as the community transforms into a frontier town, with parades and the Medicine Lodge historical night show featuring gunslinging cowboys, bank robbers, can-can dancers, and hatchet wielding Carry Nation. Entertainment can be found in all forms during the weekend: street dances featuring Lucky People and Aranda, a carnival, craft fairs, food vendors and unique shops around town. Enjoy the day while listening to live music on the downtown stage including the upbeat bluegrass of Carrie Nation and the Speakeasy and the baritone Cowboy Country of R.W. Hampton. This year will mark the grand opening of the Powwow Pavilion, a permanent home for the annual intertribal powwow. Native American vendors will have traditional cuisine, custom art and jewelry in the Indian Village located in the park. Dinosaur skull thought to be new ceratopsian species

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas owner of a dinosaur skull found in 2012 in South Dakota field said the fossil is thought to be a new species and genus of the ceratopsian.

Professional fossil hunter John Carter, of Buffalo, South Dakota, discovered the skull and with the help of others, removed the object that was covered with four to six inches of ironstone from the ground. Lawrence artist Alan Dietrich later purchased the fossil and hauled it to a paleontologist's laboratory who removed the ironstone. With the rock removed, the fossil stands about 6 feet and weighs about 600 to 750 pounds.

The director of the Utah State University Eastern Prehistoric Museum confirmed the fossil was a new species of the certaopsian, a family of dinosaur that lived mostly during the Cretaceous Period and includes the triceratops, The Topeka Capital-Journal (http://bit. ly/1QlMcc4) reported.

Dietrich said the skull is "extraordinary" because of the placement of its 17-inch nose horn, plus other unique characteristics. He said he might display it at the Denver Coliseum Mineral, Fossil and Gem Show scheduled for mid-September and the Tuscon Gem, Mineral and Fossil Showcase early next year.

Dietrich said he believes the fossil likely will be snapped up by a museum, adding that it's important that it go to such a facility so it will be in the "public domain" and so articles describing the skull can be published in scientific journals.

At home or on the road, be ready for weather extremes

We're about to enter one of the most agreeable times of year weather wise in Kansas, but don't let mild autumn temperatures fool you. Kansas' location at the geographic center of the 48 contiguous United States makes it a bullseye for all kinds of weather extremes.

In fact, the lowest temperature ever recorded in Kansas was at Lebanon, which happens to be the community closest to center of the U.S. record low of -40°F. was set there on Feb. 13, 1905, according to the Kansas Weather Data Library.
